

Mr. President
Distinguished Parliamentarians
Ladies and gentlemen

I am delighted to be among you today in such a warm and friendly environment.

Unfortunately, this year's parliamentary meeting is held at a time when Afghanistan is under the control of an extremely self-centered regime which came about after the withdrawal of the US and international partners and the subsequent collapse of the Afghan republic government. Afghanistan has once again plunged into the hands of extremist categories and is becoming the safehaven of international terrorist groups. The two decades achievements of the Afghan people have been destroyed and the country is now on its knees. Poverty, unemployment, insecurity, closure of girls' schools, discrimination and deprivation of half of the community, namely women from work and education, are major challenges facing Afghanistan. It is certainly that the Taliban have not changed at all in spite of their initial promises of changing their behavior and respect for human rights and women's rights. If anything they have become worse.

Ladies and gentlemen

There is a dire humanitarian crisis in Afghanistan and the country's social, economic, and security situation is increasingly deteriorating. The Taliban are ruling with disobedience and totally disregard the will and legitimate demands of the Afghan people and the international community.

Taliban's brutal rule caused a flight of capital and talent, the collapse of the banking system, lack of any meaningful governance, and the disappearance of the constitution and parliament. The regime has stagnated the country's educational system and does not allow girls to go to school. National unity and nationhood have been undermined by the Taliban's policies of discrimination and single-ethnic rule.

Excellencies

Despite all this, the Taliban regime seeks recognition from the international community and wants to benefit from political, economic and commercial interactions with the region and the world. But the Taliban have failed to realize that today's world is like a small village due to globalization, under which interdependence and cooperation are critical.

Not only did the Taliban regime not fulfill its obligations to fight terrorist groups and cut off relations with al -Qaeda, but the killing of al-Qaeda leader in the heart of the Afghan capital is a clear sign that the Taliban are an extremist movement that support international terrorism, endangering regional and global security. With the presence of more than twenty terrorist active groups inside Afghanistan, its certain that Taliban are not able to provide guranttees for the security of the region and the world.

In the absence of international attention to the problem of terrorism, the world will soon face a wide range of security concerns. Another catastrophe like September 11 will occur if we ignore the Taliban's actions and the threat they pose. In Afghanistan, the intensity of terrorist attacks is only increasing as seen in the recent horrible attack against the Kaj educational center, causing numerous lives of innocent people. The world must strongly condemn these attacks and boycott the sources of its funding.

While the world is trying to provide humanitarian aid to the people of Afghanistan in these difficult times, which we are very thankful for, there are some serious doubts about the Taliban's way of distributing the aid. Credible information obtained shows that the Taliban keep this assistance to their supporters and do not distribute it to ordinary Afghans. The Taliban and their regional allies, using the aid, continue their brutal rule and do not allow the Afghan people to benefit from these aids. We request that international institutions and donor countries find effective and transparent ways to ensure that these aids are not wasted and that the Taliban are not enriched.

Ladies and gentlemen

The Taliban's failure at governing and their repressive rule has forced Afghan people to rise up against the regime through different means and show defiance. Afghan people, especially the brave Afghan women are fed up with the regime and have taken to the streets and social media platforms to demand their rights. The Taliban has harshly cracked down on these protests. It is through these forms of protest that Afghan people hope the world to hear their voices and to assist them in this legitimate cause. The international community should fully and unconditionally support the people of Afghanistan in this fight particularly Afghan women who took to the streets. Do not be the region and the world. To address the current Afghan problem, we recommend the following:

First: Under no circumstances, the Taliban should be recognized. In fact, recognizing the Taliban means giving legitimacy to a selfish regime that provides safe haven to the terrorist groups.

The International Outline has taken refuge. In the meantime, the Taliban regime violates the fundamental values of the Afghan people and ignores women's rights. Recognizing such a regime will be contrary to the values of modern society today;

Second: The existence of extremist groups in Afghanistan has great risks to the security of the region and the world. The world should pay attention to this problem before it is too late.

Third: The ongoing acute humanitarian crisis, the collapse of the Afghan economy, the lack of security, the closure of girls' schools and women's rights are major challenges facing Afghanistan. The world should pay close attention to the Afghan problem and do not forget the cause of Afghan people.

Fourth: The Taliban must be pressured to let girls' schools open and not deprive Afghan women and girls of their basic rights.

Fifth: The Taliban should be held accountable for widespread human rights violations, including the killing of civilians, and persecution of religious and ethnic minorities.

Sixth: All humanitarian aid should be delivered through transparent means.

Seventh: There should be a global consensus on how to deal with the situation in Afghanistan and the problem of the country should be resolved through dialogue. The formation of an inclusive government that can represent all of Afghans should be the integral part of this solution.

Thank you for your attention
